

Periodically excited pumps

Georg Propst

May 9, 2006

Abstract: A periodically excited pump is a dynamical system that has a periodic solution with nonequilibrium mean. Based on simple ODE models of flow configurations with pipes and tanks, a physical explanation of the somewhat counterintuitive pumping effects is given. Existence of periodically excited pumps is proved. Necessary and sufficient conditions for pumping are given. It will be demonstrated that linear pumps require internal forcing.