

Abstract:

We present a few results on compressed sensing in order to give a closer look to this intriguing emerging field.

We further focus on certain numerical methods which perform sparse recovery. In particular we will stress their convergence properties.

We conclude by presenting a work in progress on matrix completion where the ideas of compressed sensing are used in order to recover low-rank matrices from a few samples of their entries.